The Domestic Violence Early Intervention Program (DVEIP) is a court program designed to address first-time misdemeanor domestic violence offenses with court supervision and treatment. The goal is to provide effective intervention to offenders who are willing to take responsibility for their behavior and make the necessary changes to prevent future domestic abuse and violence. The program is voluntary; however, the defendant must meet eligibility requirements and be approved by the program judge. The District Attorney must also agree to dismiss the charges if the defendant successfully completes the program. If the defendant fails to successfully complete the program, the case is referred back to court for prosecution.

The Domestic Violence Repeat Offenders Program (DVROP) is a new court program which offers an alternative to incarceration to misdemeanor domestic violence repeat offenders and support services to victims and children. A conviction via plea or trial is entered and the offender is placed in the one-year program. Offenders are intensely supervised, seeing a probation officer, attending counseling two or three times per week and attending bi-monthly reviews with the program judge. DVROP is a zero-tolerance program, meaning any and all violations result in immediate sanctions, which include community service, jail or termination. If the offender is terminated, it is likely the full jail sentence will be imposed with no credit for the time spent in the program. Successful completion of the program results in completion of sentence with no other penalties imposed; however, the conviction still remains on record.

Services

Because requests for services far exceed program resources, NMLA evaluates each case individually. The priority areas of law include:

- Fair Housing and Landlord/Tenant
- Government Benefits
- Family Matters
- Domestic Violence
- Consumer

NMLA receives funds from Children Youth and Families Department to provide representation for survivors of domestic violence and their children. Using these funds, NMLA can provide assistance for any survivor of domestic violence, regardless of income and citizenship status. (Many other services are available only to citizens or lawful residents.)

NMLA serves survivors of domestic violence primarily by referral from a domestic violence provider. Providers seeking representation for their clients should contact their nearest NMLA office to set up a referral procedure. Provider staff or survivors seeking information about a legal issue (family law, housing, government benefits, etc.) should call Law Access New Mexico, a statewide hotline providing free legal advice on a broad range of legal issues, at: 1-800-340-9771.
